86 BURKE (Edmund) Statesman, b. 1729, d. 1797. A. L. s. 2 pp. 4to. Bristol, Nov. 2, 1774. To his sister, "I know it will give you both pleasure to hear, that after having been elected for Malton, in Yorkshire, several respectable people of this City invited me to stand a candidate here, and that I am elected by a majority of 251 after one of the longest and warmest contests that has been remembered. The party that has lost the Election threatens a petition, but I am satisfied they have no solid grounds to proceed upon. The Election has lasted a month. I was put in nomination several days before I came hither. My absence gave the other party great advantages. My brother, who was in London when the messengers from this City arrived at my house there, came to Bristol, and prevented our affairs from suffering so much as otherwise they would have done by my absence, for I was then 220 miles from London and 270 at least from Bristol. This event has given us all great satisfaction, and will give, I trust, a great deal to you. This is the second City in the kingdom, and to be invited and chosen for it without any request of mine, and at no expense to myself, but with much charge and trouble to many public spirited gentlemen, is an honour to which we ought not to be insensible."
